WASHINGTON NEWS.

President Arthur Satisfied with His Cabinet.

Government Aid for Suppression of the Arizona Cowboys.

Melville Expects to Reach DeLong and His Crew.

CAPITAL GOSSIP.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—It is generally conceded that Bancroft Davis will soon leave the state department to return to the court of claims. Judge Nott is absent, ill, in North Carolina, and as the law requires a majority of the court to give judgment the three judges now here are obliged to agree or the case cannot be decided. Judge Davis is worn out with the work of the state department and will be glad to return to his former place on the bench. The position was held open for Hunt but he preferred the Russian mission.

The report that the president was dissatisfied with the conduct of the state department by Frelinghuysen is authoritatively denied. Arthur is not disturbed by criticisms in regard to Irish-American suspects. He believes the country will recognize the astuteness which accomplishes without irritation all and more than excitement and bluster would have done. He is willing to be judged by the results. There is no member of the cabinet more firmly fixed than Frelinghuysen.

A member of the cabinet is authority for saying that the president said on signing the commissions of Teller and Chandler that he felt qualified to think he had no wranglers in his cabinet and to his entire satisfaction. He hoped there would be no necessity for further changes.

The foreign affairs committee has determined to bring Shipherd to book and intend to put him through a rigid examination. If he refuses to answer questions the power of the committee to compel him to do so will be exercised.

Republicans are well pleased with their work in the house and are in better spirits than for a long time. They say, should they lose the congressional election this fall on the Pacific coast through anger at the veto, the successful working of the present bill, if it is signed, will put the party in shape for '84. The failure, through democratic opposition, of the second attempt to get the bill to extend the charters of national banks in a position which would make it possible to secure its passage at this session, is not displeasing to the republican campaign committee, even if the matter is left open.

MELVILLE'S HOPES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—Secretary Hunt received a dispatch from Hoffman, charge d'affaires at St. Petersburg, under date of March 31, enclosing a letter from Chief Engineer Melville, dated January 31 and written at a point on his way to the mouth of the Lena, 333 miles beyond Yakutsk. Hoffman states that the governor of this port appears to have shown much good will in sending your order of January 15 to Melville. The speed with which it went through is quite remarkable. Lieutenant Danenhower telegraphed me under date of January 28 from Krasnagarok, 4,000 versts from St. Petersburg, that he may be expected here about April 20. Chief Engineer Melville, in the letter referred to, says he has every reason to hope to find DeLong and his people.

GUITEAU'S COUNSEL.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—District Attorney Corkhill to-day received a note from Guiteau stating that Scoville has nothing to do with him or his affairs, and Charles H. Reed has entire charge of his case in banc. He also received notice from Scoville that he would be ready to argue the case May 15. The district attorney told Reed that he would take no notice of either communication, but when the case was called in the general term whoever is present will be recognized.

COWBOY TROUBLES.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—The cabinet to-day considered the cowboy troubles in Arizona and steps were taken towards rendering government aid to the civil authorities in suppressing trouble in the future.

HOUSE PROCEEDINGS.

Crapo, from the banking committee, moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution making the bill to enable national banks to extend their corporate existence, the special order for the 25th; yeas 148, nays 80; not two-thirds.

The Bisbee case was laid over.

Hiscock, from the committee on appropriations, reported a joint resolution appropriating $465,000 for deficiency in public printing.

Page presented a resolution of the San Francisco produce exchange asking for a specific duty of not less than twenty-five cents on each four pounds of imported malt. Referred.

SENATE PROCEEDINGS.

Ingalls from the judiciary committee reported with amendment the bill introduced by Plumb in December last to declare certain lands granted the Pacific railroads subject to taxation. The bill as amended provides that all lands granted by the acts of July 1, '62, to aid in the construction of railroad and telegraph lines from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, etc., lands granted by the amendatory acts of July 2d, '64, to several railroad companies therein named which have been selected and certified and on which said companies respectively became entitled to receive patents upon payment of cost of surveying and selecting same as provided by section 21 of said amendatory act of July 2d, '64, notwithstanding such companies have made such payment, shall be subject to all legal taxes imposed under the authority of any state or territory in which such lands are located to the same extent as they would have been had such cost been paid and lands conveyed to said railroad companies. The bill does not apply to lands already forfeited, nor to operate to relieve any company from any for the future, or heretofore incurred. It is also provided that prior to payments of costs of survey, and by said railroad companies no tax shall be imposed except in organized counties.

The committee added a new section as follows: That if any sales of such lands for taxes, monies due or to become due the United States under said acts for such costs, fees, etc., shall be and remain a first lien on such lands and shall be paid by the purchaser at such tax sale who shall thereupon, his title under tax sale being complete, receive a patent for the land so purchased by him which shall operate only as a release of the interest of the United States in land described.

In the same calendar a bill introduced by McDill to establish a board of railway commissioners to regulate inter-state commerce and for other purposes, was tabled temporarily.

Allison and Beck were excused from service on conference on the Indian appropriation bill.

The remainder of the session was spent in consideration of the bill for improvement of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, reported by Kellogg from the commerce committee, appropriating five million dollars for the former and one million dollars for the latter—none to be used in construction or repairs of levees.

Garland proposed an amendment making the appropriation thirteen million dollars for the Mississippi and two million dollars for the Missouri, to be expended to facilitate navigation, agriculture and the postal service.

The bill went over without action.

Johnston offered a resolution calling for diplomatic correspondence which passed early in 1870 between the United States minister at Madrid and the Spanish secretary of state concerning cases of United States citizens condemned to death in Cuba.

Adjourned.

Denver Doings.

DENVER, April 18.—The state board to-day finished the railroad assessment. The total valuation of railroad property in 1881 was $17,641,506.14, an increase of over $6,000,000.

Mayor Morris says he will have the glaring signs over the doors of houses of prostitution torn down and will do all in his power to stop the growth of the social evil.

John W. Young, son of Brigham, is here accompanied by two wives, en route to Arizona.

The Times' Leadville correspondent, reviewing the financial status of the carbonate camp in the past fiscal year, states that the total income was $149,000; expenses $148,000; total debt, $169,000.

R. A. Eccles, a Leadville grocer, has assigned.

A new phase of the Baggs-Otero affair developed this afternoon. Pliny S. Rice entered suit in the county court against young Otero for a thousand dollars in payment of his services in securing and tendering to Otero the $2,400 note.

Rice Released.

DENVER, April 18.—Pliny S. Rice, the man arrested yesterday afternoon charged with having the Otero note in his possession, was released in the face of the general belief that he, and VanWoert, "banker" in the opera house block, also engaged in negotiations, could be held as accomplices. Doc Baggs is still in town, and there has been no effort made to arrest him.

Lightning Express to Denver.

CHICAGO, April 18.—The passenger agent of the A. T. & S. F., having his attention called to the following dispatch from Atchison, said he understood the thing was to be done soon, although he was not officially notified: "It was announced here to-day that the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe had made an arrangement to put on its track, during the coming week, a lightning passenger train to Denver, to make a run from Atchison and over the third rail from Pueblo in 24 hours." It is assumed and not without good foundation that this information is correct, as the Santa Fe has been ballasted with rock through Kansas a distance of several hundred miles and is equipped in its every department to make that time in perfect safety. This train will make but a few stops, will be composed of sleeper, baggage, one passenger coach and engine.

The Chicago and Alton is putting on a similar train between St. Louis and Chicago and Kansas City.

Lamson Further Respited.

LONDON, April 18.—Lamson has been granted a further respite, until the 28th inst. The secretary of state for the home department has addressed the following letter to the high sheriff of Surrey.

WHITEHALL, April 16, 1882.

SIR: The minister of the United States having communicated to the secretary of state the earnest wish of the president that the respite granted the convict, Dr. Henry Lamson, should be further extended, in order to give time for the consideration of certain documents, a portion of which are now on the way from America, I am to signify to you the queen's command, that the execution of the sentence of death as passed upon Lamson be further respited until Friday, the 28th day of April. You will at the same time, see that the prisoner is informed of this extension of the present respite. Take time to clearly explain to him that no further respite will be granted, and that no evidence which has hitherto been submitted to the secretary of state, either from England or America, affords any jurisdiction for advising any interference with sentence of law.

[Signed] W. V. HARCOURT.

Sentenced and Pardoned.

ST. LOUIS, April 18.—A report has just gained circulation here that the Ford brothers, who killed Jesse James, were hung at St. Joseph this morning. Inquiry proves this to be false, but inquiry elicited the fact that the grand jury found an indictment against them for murder in the first degree, this noon, and about an hour later the boys were brought into court, pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to be hanged on the 19th of May.

ST. JOSEPH, April 18.—It is understood that Governor Crittenden has granted a full pardon to Charles and Robert Ford on the killing of Jesse James.

ST. JOSEPH, April 18.—The messenger with the governor's pardon for the Ford boys has not yet arrived. They are still in jail. To-day Sheriff Ray of this county served warrants on Robert and Charles Ford for complicity in the murder of Wood Hite, one of the James gang, in Ray county. The boys are disconcerted at this turn of affairs.

Defiant Missourians.

ST. LOUIS, April 18.—Three county judges of Green county, Missouri, appear before the United States court at Jefferson City to-day to show cause why they failed to levy a tax to pay interest due on the Kansas City and Memphis railway bonds. The bonded debt with interest accrued amounts to over $500,000. The citizens of Green county declare that they will not pay these bonds, and the farmers have organized, calling themselves "Brothers of Freedom," to resist payment of the tax. When the land is sold for taxes they propose to buy it in for one dollar, and declare openly that the climate of Green county will not be healthy for any person who bids higher.

Wholesale Escape of Convicts.

CHICAGO, April 18.—A dispatch from Little Rock says: Early this morning fifty convicts tried to escape from the camp at Torcho creek. Eight succeeded in passing the guards, one was killed instantly, two were badly wounded, and the remaining are being hunted down by bloodhounds and guards with shot guns.

Manufacturing Company Embarrassed.

PROVIDENCE, April 18.—The Providence Tool company gives notice of being unable to meet its engagements. A meeting of creditors has been called. Among the reasons assigned for its present suspension are the effect of western floods on the sewing machine business and the fact that the last installment paid under former extension of indebtedness had not been earned when it became due and its payment simply created a new debt of $300,000.

Fatal Tunnel Cave.

CUMBERLAND, Md., April 18. The roof of the Doe Gulley tunnel, on the B. & O. railway, caved to-day burying twelve laborers under the debris. Some of them are probably fatally injured. The road was blocked several hours. The company were widening the tunnel and the men injured were at work when the accident occurred.

Town Destroyed.

GREENSBURG, PA., April 18.—Fire broke out in New Alexandria, Westmoreland county, at four o'clock this evening and is still raving. Two stores and six dwellings have already been consumed. A report at 10 o'clock says the fire is beyond control and citizens are panic-stricken. As the buildings are mostly frame there is little hope of saving the town, which has about 700 inhabitants. Loss thus far is estimated at $20,000; small insurance.

Starvation at Labrador.

QUEBEC, April 18.—People on the Labrador coast are in a state of starvation. Two men named Lawrence and Pierre Crepau, with some of their children, died from want of food. Indians having no means of subsistence in the woods are swarming down upon the settlers.

Jurors Repudiate their Verdict.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 18.—Two white jurors in the election case came into court this morning and stated that they signed the verdict on Saturday under a misapprehension, and duress of bodily pain. The judge held that the avowal came too late, and defendants excepted and made motion for a new trial. Judge Bond overruled the motion of the defendants to quash the array of the grand jury on the ground that the talesmen had been illegally drawn.

Parnell Returning.

LONDON, April 18.—The Observer says: After the release of Parnell, all other suspects will be released.

PARIS, April 18.—Parnell has started for London.

Colorado Excursion Rates.

CHICAGO, April 17.—The Union Pacific, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe and the Denver and Rio Grande roads have requested passenger and ticket agents of the connecting lines to place on sale June 1, 1882 first-class round trip tickets to Colorado points, to be withdrawn from sale September 30. The following are the rates: Atchison or Kansas City to Pueblo and return, $38; Atchison or Kansas City to Colorado Springs and return, $38; Atchison or Kansas City to Denver and return, $38; Council Bluffs to Denver and return, $39; Council Bluffs to Colorado Springs and return, $39; Council Bluffs to Pueblo and return, $39, Kansas City, Leavenworth or St. Joseph to Denver and return, $38; Kansas City, Leavenworth or St. Joseph to Colorado Springs and return, $38; Kansas City, Leavenworth or St. Joseph to Pueblo and return, $38; Council Bluffs to Denver via Union Pacific railway and return, $38.50; Council Bluffs to Colorado Springs and return, $38.50; Council Bluffs to Pueblo and return, $38.50.

Fire in Peoria.

CHICAGO, April 18.—Special dispatches having given exaggerated figures in regard to the loss by last night's fire at Peoria, the associated press agent there made inquiry of Oscar Furst, the proprietor of the distillery, who estimates his loss at $15,000.

Chicago's Chief Gambler.

CHICAGO, April 18.—Mike McDonald, the reputed chief of the gambling fraternity, was to-day found not guilty of keeping a gaming house. He swore himself out of the court, and the testimony of several witnesses, notably Mayor Harrison, was in the same line. Chas Wetship, formerly in his employ, was convicted.

Indian Murders.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 18.—A Tucson dispatch says: News has just been received from Charleston that Indians murdered two Mexican teamsters near Hereford. After the murder the Indians took the mules from the wagon and escaped before they could be overtaken.

RAILROAD REVENUE.

Statement Showing the Assessment of Railroad Property in El Paso County.

The state board of equalization which has just completed its work in Denver yesterday transmitted to County Clerk Eaton through its secretary, N. H. Meldrum, the assessment made on railroad property in El Paso county for the revenue year beginning the first of May. As the Denver and New Orleans road was not in operation at the beginning of the year the statement forwarded does not include any assessment on that line. According to the statement the Denver & Rio Grande company has 53.425 miles of narrow gauge track in operation in the county on which the assessed value per mile including right of way, road bed, bridges, cutouts, etc., is $5,000. The value per mile of rolling stock, telegraph lines, side track, tools, materials, etc., used in operating is $2,858.888811, thus making the total assessment per mile $7,858.888811, and the total narrow-gauge assessment in the county $419,863.13. This does not include the third rail of which there is 48.125 miles in the county, and of which the assessed value per mile is $1,530.406665, thereby making an additional amount of $73,943.90. It will thus be seen that the complete assessment on railroad property in the county is $493,807.03 exclusive of the D. & N. O. road. Last year the assessment made by the board of equalization was $386,935.00, giving an increase of $106,872.03.

In accordance with the general laws of 1877 the above amount does not include the real estate and improvements thereon owned by the D. & R. G. company in the county.

JANAUSCHEK.

Interesting Talk With the Famous Tragedienne.

What She Has to Say on Various Dramatic Topics.

The admirers of the legitimate and the tragic are, on Saturday night next, to enjoy the opportunity of seeing Janauschek, the great tragedienne, in her famous role of Mary Stuart in "Mary Queen of Scots." Our people will please remember that she is one of the few tragediennes who now grace the stage of any country and who can play in any language. The following interview with this great actress is taken from the Cincinnati Commercial.

Neither America nor England can have the honor of claiming Madame Janauschek, but this country can, at least, claim that she has chosen this land as her home, and that it was here she first thought of acquiring another language as a medium for her great art.

It was in San Francisco that Madame Janauschek was advised and persuaded to learn English and to be thereby able to delight a greater number of people, who, although recognizing her power as an actress while speaking a language foreign to them, would more fully appreciate her in perfectly understanding each word she uttered. It was an arduous undertaking, and required not only courage but patience. In an incredibly short time after she had made up her mind to do so, Madame Janauschek played Lady Macbeth in English, and certainly before her ears had become enough accustomed to the sound of the strange language to be at home even with her cues.

It was therefore in that far western city where so many stars were first recognized, where Matilda Heron first brought down the house in "Camille," that Madame Janauschek spoke the words of the great master as they were written. She is an immense favorite there, and no actress now on the stage would receive a more overwhelming ovation than she at a future engagement.

The above is perhaps a digression, but those facts came to mind as a reply to a card sent up at the Emery was waited for. It was so late in the afternoon that it seemed a hopeless venture, so that it was with surprise as well as pleasure that the summons to the presence of her who had the right before been Marie, Queen of Scots, was received. The actress was indeed busy, or certainly had been occupied with the preparations for the evening's performance. No sooner had her unaffected greeting put the caller at ease, than a glance around the room showed how busy a star is off the stage as well as before the footlights.

As Madame Janauschek plays a number of roles each engagement, her baggage is a ponderous and troublesome question. She prefers to take her trunks to the hotel, and then send for each performance one or two filled with the costumes for the evening. Her maid was busy fastening the two trunks containing the costumes for "Bleak House."

In the drama she plays a dual role, and she said it took two trunks to contain all that was needed for the two parts. On the table near the actress was a stand, then uncovered, but which told by its form what it had been holding; it is one of the indispensable belongings of every artiste who goes before the footlights; when admitted to the hotel sanctum, it is the article usually found on the table or the grate; it is nothing more nor less than a stand for a wig; in the day time it is honored by holding the flaxen braids of a Marguerite, the dark tresses of a Lady Macbeth or the fiery mass of a Nancy Sikes. All these wigs have had an uncanny sort of a look when seen gazing, as it were, into the glowing coals, but as it is now no more a secret that blondes wear dark hair on the stage and brunettes indulge in flaxen locks than that actresses powder their faces, even the great tragedienne will pardon the reminiscences evoked by the empty wig stand.

The first impression Madame Janauschek produces when seen off the stage is that of a very quiet yet pleasant person, and one of a remarkably even temperament.

That is the more remarkable as it brings into contrast the memory of the great and varied emotions and stormy passions she knows so well how to give on the stage. She has a mild, frank manner, and a strikingly pleasant way of looking straight at the person she is talking to. She has evidently adopted English as her chosen language; her maid spoke English to her, and she speaks with the idiomatic familiarity of a person who has schooled herself to think in an acquired language; however the remaining traces of her accent are much more noticeable in conversation than on the stage.

She spoke first of all in pleased terms of the audience that had greeted her the night before, and which was another proof of the increasingly strong hold of the legitimate in this theater-going community. She was the more pleased in that she had been informed that since the opera Festival the theaters had not been very well patronized; she thought it was not to be wondered at after the immense amount of money spent for music people stopped investing in amusements of any kind. Madame Janauschek did not make her usual trip across the ocean this past summer; she said she was not only detained by the illness of others, but by the fact that she was, therefore, obliged to attend to her business herself.

She said she was not able to go even to the sea side, but that she spent most of her vacation at the St. James in Boston, for Madame Janauschek makes her home at the Hub, although she acknowledged that New York is one of those centers toward which artistic people of every kind are drifting, and that when she must make arrangements for the future to the metropolis of the Atlantic she must go. She showed her love for natural scenery and the charms of the sea by her description of the view she has from her hotel windows; she said: "Although I cannot see the waters of the bay, I can see the tops of all the rigging of the ships in the harbor and watch them sail in and out."

When she travels Madame always stops as near as possible to the theatre; she said it was a much better plan, because if anything were forgotten it was so much better not to have far to send. Then the talk drifted into the many ways in which the time of an artiste is consumed. Madame remarked that so frequent are the interruptions of all kinds, that she had begun an important letter at 10 o'clock, but did not have the chance of finishing it till 3 in the afternoon. She said it was much easier for those who traveled with a single play and a company that needed no rehearsing all the season, but for one who, like herself, has a large repertoire, there is much hard work attached to the triumphs of a traveling star.

A witty woman once wrote an article on dress, in which she said that, if ever she presented herself at the gate of heaven, and St. Peter should ask her if she knew why he barred the way to her, she should unhesitatingly reply: "Clothes." The remembrance of that came to mind as Madame Janauschek, with a slight touch of humor, related the trials and tribulations her rich costumes bring to her. "For," said she, "my costumes are such as must always look clean and new. Queens can not trail around soiled velvets and satins, and grand ladies have laces a little oft color."

Then the stand before noticed, the one that had in imagination been holding the tresses of Marguerite, the blonde hair of "Forget me not," and a host of other characters, inspired the Madame to some confidences on the subject—but, curious public, they were confidences!

The stand itself shall be no more silent, they would not, O disappointed lady readers, make your hair stand on end, they might make you stroke it with a more caressing touch—if you have any—and appreciate those gifts of nature that would make you a prize to the red man on the war path—but "enough."

Soon the conversation got back some way or other to New York and to new plays; then Madame Janauschek, like Fanny Davenport, had things to say about the critics in New York that would make the left ear of each one a perfect bonfire. She said that they always imagined when a new play was produced that to show they knew anything they put down everything. She added that her new play, though by no means perfect, did not deserve wholesale condemnation, and that she intended to have it re-arranged, and to give it again in other cities, where criticism is more independent.

From plays and critics the tragedienne naturally drifted to a little talk about other artists. She asked with interest about Booth's last engagement here, and when she learned that it was a success she was greatly pleased, because to her mind Booth is the greatest actor on the English-speaking stage and she ought to know.

She said, however, that she feared it was owing to the fact that Booth had made a great hit in London, that he was now the adored actor in his own country. In regard to that and other matters theatrical, she said she wished the American public were more independent; that people would not be afraid to say they liked a performance or not, without having their opinions made by clever managers beforehand. She said: "The American people have every right to be independent in matters of taste, as well as in other things, for this is such a great country or rather it is growing to be a great country in all things."

In regard to the breaking up of Rossi's company, Madame Janauschek said that she thought that he might have made a success if he had not so soon followed Salvini; that he is a great actor, perhaps more quiet than Salvini, and consequently less impressive to an audience not understanding him, but that anyway after last season the public was a little tired of foreign tongues, the Italian and the French of last winter were enough for a while longer. Then Madame Janauschek spoke about the Bernhardt season, and rightly said that the sensation could not draw again; she thought the French actress had not a high opinion of her American public, which was very ungrateful of her.

There was a slight but quite pardonable feeling of pride evident in Madame Janauschek in speaking about the American public and other foreign artists; she seemed to feel that those who cared so little for the American public as not to learn a new language had not a full title to their continued favor. In that she is right. Janauschek has done what a Bernhardt would not take the trouble to do. She has conquered a new language, and a new country.

The Tribune suggests Adams and Otero as anti-banks candidates for 1884.

The redistricting of Missouri will be arranged so as to give Missouri a solid democratic representation.

The Denver Tribune makes this very sensible suggestion to California on the Chinese question: "If California does not want the Chinese why does California employ them? Boycotting in the labor market ought to be more effective than anti-Chinese bills. They are living in California because the state gives them the means of living there. If these means were taken away by the voluntary and general action of the people the Chinese would take themselves away also. It seems to us that California is supporting and nursing the evil of which it complains so vociferously."

The discussion of the appointment of the Boston collector is very much confused. The simple question is what does it indicate about the policy of President Arthur's administration. A year ago, in a letter to President Garfield, signed by himself, Senators Conkling and Platt and Postmaster General James, he protested against the appointment of Collector Robertson on the ground of senatorial courtesy. He and his friends firmly maintained that the president should not make an important appointment in a state when both senators were opposed to it. The president would not yield and on this issue President Arthur advised Mr. Conkling to resign. He did so and was not re-elected. Now the simple question is, has President Arthur changed his mind on this question and now believes that the president should not recognize in his appointments the stalwart custom of senatorial courtesy. If so, his appointment of Worthington is not inconsistent with his principles though it is degrading to the service to hand its management over to Butler's political punishers. He then admits that Conkling's position and his own was wrong a year ago. If this be true and the wretched custom is destroyed, a bad appointment or two will not be greatly mourned. But if Arthur maintains he was right a year ago and intends to recognize the custom of senatorial courtesy, his appointment is unfair and inconsistent. This is the question at issue because the policy of President Arthur is on trial and it is his appointment and not Senator Hoar's or Senator Dawes'.

The Hon. W. R. Morrison of Illinois is talked of as a democratic candidate for the presidency in 1884. He would be a very strong candidate and make a better run than any candidate the party has had since the war. He has a good war record, having gone into the army at the beginning of the war. He served as colonel of the Forty-ninth Illinois regiment and was severely wounded at Fort Donaldson. This makes him much stronger as a candidate than either Tilden or Seymour, who were weighed down with a bad war record. He has also had a long experience in congress, where he served from 1863-65 and from 1873 to date. During this time he has shown statesmanlike qualities and has occupied such a leading position as to give him great familiarity with the great public questions on which he has been generally sound. He has particularly distinguished himself by his advocacy of hard money principles when the west was overrun with greenbackism. This makes him a really stronger candidate than Hancock who did not have the confidence of the country as a statesman. Again he has been an earnest advocate of democratic principles and thus can do what Mr. Greeley could not do, call out the full vote of the party. There is hardly a leading man in the party who has so much good positive strength for the presidency which is not offset by some equally positive elements of weakness. But the democracy has not yet made a wise nomination and it is a question whether it will. In 1868 when the war issues were still unsettled and it was preeminently the time for the nomination of a soldier like Hancock whose name would be a pledge that the results of the war should not be lost, a civilian was nominated, who was thought at the time to have been a rebel sympathizer during the war. In 1880 when the war issues were not prominent and a statesman was demanded who would have the confidence of the country, a soldier was nominated who was brave in war, but knew nothing about civil affairs. The democratic party has nominated many good men to office but at the wrong time. In fact it is always doing the right thing at the wrong time or the wrong thing at the right time.

OVER ZEAL.

The Republic yesterday had a remarkable editorial on "The same old threat," which shows too much zeal. In the first place it is trying to show that the rumor of the removal of the Denver & Rio Grande general offices is a threat, and only intended to affect the question of granting a right of way to the Denver & New Orleans railway. The Republic, which is now an organ, may have some basis for this remark, but unless it has, it is very foolish to make such statements, except it wishes the threat carried out. The rumor of the removal of the offices to Denver came from Denver and was circulated in the Denver press. It is a fact generally recognized that business of the general offices could be done more easily at Denver or South Pueblo. The offices are kept here only because of the interest of a few of the officers in this city. It is very plain that the continuance of the general offices in this city depends on the interest which General Palmer and others retain in the city. Now the practical question is, will misrepresentation, mean flings and continual attacks on the Denver and Rio Grande increase or diminish this interest. It says it is a threat to coerce the city against giving the Denver and New Orleans proper right of way. Does the Republic know of any opposition offered to a proper entrance of the Denver and New Orleans into this city? It assumes altogether too much in saying this.

The Republic cannot show that there is the opposition it intimates. Why does it charge that there is opposition? Simply because it knows that the proposed right of way of the Denver and New Orleans is injurious to the city and that it may forestall public opinion by creating prejudice by such misrepresentation. As the Republic is in the confidence of the Denver and New Orleans it knows that the Denver and New Orleans proposes to run its line through the residence portion of the southern part of the city, up Cascade avenue, along in front of the new hotel and fix its station somewhere in front of the school house. Is this only giving the Denver and New Orleans an equal chance with the Denver and Rio Grande, a chance which cuts up our streets, injures the new hotel and school building and endangers life in driving? The Republic has announced itself in favor of the Denver and New Orleans coming into and through this city. Will it please state how the road is coming through the city and whether it favors it. The Republic knows that such an entrance will be an unnecessary injury to the city.

So far as we know the Denver & Rio Grande road is making no effort whatever to prevent the Denver & New Orleans from coming into the city. If "fairness and genuine manliness" is shown, it cannot have any effect on the removal of the offices. It is not known whether even if the council should let the Denver & New Orleans run through the streets, it would have any effect, except that it certainly would not increase the interest in the city felt by those who are keeping the general offices here. We do not believe there is any threat and it is only the effect of the Denver & New Orleans paper here to create prejudice against the Denver & Rio Grande road, and to create sympathy for the Denver & New Orleans.

The Republic says in its last paragraph that the loss of the general offices would be a loss to the city. If so why strive to remove them? Cannot the Republic be the organ of the Denver & New Orleans without attacking the Denver & Rio Grande, especially when the latter road is making no fight? Need it go out of the way to say that there is a "threat to ruin or ruin," when nothing whatever has been done inimical to the entrance of the Denver & New Orleans into this city? The Republic should restrain itself. Its zeal is too great. It should rest content with being an advocate of one interest without attacking another, unless there is a clash of interests.

The Republic makes one charge that is worthy of notice as compared with a sentence immediately following. It says, "Our citizens are waking up to the fact that they have been persistently discriminated against by this same Rio Grande influence." It then goes on to say: "It would be unjust to General Palmer and some others of the D. & R. G. management not to frankly state that they have done much for the city, in the way of building residences, beautifying the place, inviting immigration, contributing handsomely to our chief educational and other institutions, taking stock in the new hotel, and retaining the general offices to the present time."

Now we submit do these statements hang together? It specifies how these men who control the road are liberally investing their private means here and making generous bequests and still they "persistently discriminate against" the city. In other words they are persistently discriminating against themselves. Is this true? And are these favors likely to continue when the gratitude shown is a charge of "persistently discriminating against" the city?

THE SHIPPING OF JUMBO.

How the Famous Elephant was Removed from the Zoological Gardens in London for Transportation to this Country.

The removal of the elephant Jumbo from his comfortable quarters in the gardens of the Zoological society in London to the docks, for his voyage to this country, is graphically described in the London News of March 23. The box had been placed at the back of the elephants' houses, just outside the paddock in which the great bathing pond is situated. Strictly speaking, it was no box at all as it stood, but really a square tube or tunnel on wheels, the back and front having to be added afterwards. The bottom was level with the ground, the wheels being sunk in a sloping pit. The outer frame of pine wood is lined with oak, and the whole securely welded together with heavy iron bars. The structure measures thirteen feet in length, six in breadth, and about eleven in height. Jumbo having been chained up by the forelegs on the previous day, he could offer comparatively little resistance when he was hobbled. This preliminary operation, which was admirably managed by "Elephant Bill," assisted by Scott and two other keepers, was rendered necessary, not only to close the mouth, but in order that the trunk, with which an infuriated elephant might inflict serious injuries, should not be allowed to have full play. A small iron chain was quickly passed around the body, thence upwards round the muzzle between the eyes and the stumps of the tusks, and fastened with iron bolts. Meanwhile Jumbo gave evident signs of displeasure, kneeling down, moving his ears backwards and forwards, and scraping the ground restlessly with the pads of his feet. However, he uttered no sound and walked almost unresistingly out of his house to the back and into his box. Arriving fairly inside this structure, he was brought to a standstill in the centre, and in a surprisingly short space of time he was fastened to the iron-bound beams on each side by his fore-legs with the hobbles by which he had been previously secured in his house. He was now effectually fixed inside his carriage, but much remained to be done before he was ready to be moved. The hind legs, to begin with, had to be lassoed with a rope, in order that they might be held previously to their being attached to the box by chains in the same manner as the forelegs. Here Jumbo showed considerable dexterity in avoiding the noose with which it was attempted to encircle his ankles. He continued to kneel down and to paw the ground, while ever now and then he would lean forward in the apparent endeavor to stand upon his head, like a performing elephant at a circus. First one of his hind-legs was secured and the second had been caught in a rope passed in and out of the iron railings and pulled by half a dozen men, when Jumbo, who had just then appeared to be getting tired of resistance, put forth all his strength in one mighty effort and fairly broke the rope, which snapped with a report like that of a pistol shot. The rope was in good condition, and measured four inches in circumference. After a considerable delay Jumbo found himself a prisoner bound literally hand and foot, a position of affairs which apparently did not improve his temper. He now refused the biscuits and buns which were offered to him, and, instead of devouring them greedily as usual, and putting out his trunk for more, he merely strewed them about upon the ground. There being a direct current of air through the box, it was attempted to fix temporary shutters in front, and with this object large hinges were fixed to the woodwork. But the shutters had no sooner been screwed in than they were knocked on the ground by the indignant elephant. A loud cheer from those assembled followed this exploit. It was then resolved to fasten him in at once by means of iron girders and wooden planks, which were ready at hand to be put through iron clamps front and back. This was an occupation accompanied with by considerable danger, the men having to climb to the roof of the box, which was being rocked with considerable violence by its occupant. In his desperation Jumbo dashed his head against an iron girder, thereby cutting his forehead and chipping a small piece off one of his tusk stumps. Just as the men had finished their task the box swayed upon the wheels with increased violence, whereupon they came down with great precipitation, amidst renewed cheering from the spectators. The whole of the morning until one o'clock was occupied in getting Jumbo securely caged.

The operations of the workmen employed in clearing an easy slope from the pit in which the elephant van had been sunk were watched during the afternoon by about 150 people inside the gardens. A few others entered the gardens later in the afternoon, but the crowd never exceeded 200. A second crowd gathered outside the palings, and by these gratis sight-seers the proceedings were keenly watched to the last. Jumbo's massive head behind the bars was exposed to the full blast, and, after his warm stable, the exposure to the successive storms must have been very disagreeable. The animal was undoubtedly cowed by his novel position; but, as he freely took the buns and oranges offered him, and thrust his trunk through for more, it may be assumed he was not profoundly miserable, nor much frightened, nor angry. Yet, watched from the rear of the van, which was bored to correspond with the front, he might be seen continually trying to pull, now one leg and now another, free from the fetters binding him finally to the strong stanchions, and backing with all his weight against the woodwork. About four o'clock the laborers had finished their work and the horses were brought up. The double shafts were fastened to the low body of the van, and pulleys and ropes were attached to a tree ahead. Three-inch deal planks were laid down to lighten the working of the solid bronl wheels. Jumbo's small eye took stock of these preparations, and the lissome trunk once more began to feel, softly as a lady's fingers, the bars and the heads of the bolts. A few tools were left on the platform which protrudes from the bottom of the van, and these Jumbo swept away as if they were a handful of nuts. The carpenters by and by gave an additional turn with their screw-wrenches, and everything was pronounced ready for what all felt was the crucial test of of the whole business, and now that the most difficult ordeal, that of securely caging the beast, had been accomplished with comparative ease. It was reasonably enough conjectured that if Jumbo patiently accepted the first movements of his temporary life on wheels, and took the experience like a philosopher, not perhaps relishing, but still resolved to make the best of it, a great point would be gained. The police and foremen of the works cleared away the spectators, who, as usual, got in the way everywhere, and amidst a breathless silence, save the howling of the snow-laden gale, the horses were urged to a long and strong pull. Four of Pickford's most magnificent hawsters were in the shaft team, and three others straining on the pulley tackle. The big structure was soon moved some three feet and then promptly checked. By degrees it was dragged half-way up the incline, and here the coverage of one of the wheels snapped through one of the three-inch planks as if it were a bit of deal panel. By means of bars and jacks, the body of the van was raised until another plank was slipped under, and flat bars of half-inch iron were laid down. Meanwhile Jumbo's cage was standing on the incline. At first he had thrust his trunk through the bars, and amused himself by trying to reach the shaft-horses, but Scott, from his place upon the platform, grasped the active member and kept it out of mischief. Buns and oranges were again offered and readily accepted, and Scott seized the opportunity to administer a score or so of onions, which the elephant conveyed to his mouth, and with marvellous celerity presented his trunk at "the present." Henceforth, though the haulings and stoppages were frequent and tedious, Jumbo behaved himself remarkably well, the poor old fellow, with the cut over the brow, caused by an early charge at the iron work, and a general sombreness of aspect, nevertheless in many ways betraying something of subdued fear and gentle resignation. After nearly two hours of persevering labor, the van was dragged upon level ground amidst the cheers of the outsiders.

The anxiety as to Jumbo being now so far over, the next difficulty was to navigate the concern some hundred yards to the entrance-gate. This could only be done by turning sharply round the corner of the elephant-house, passing along the walk overlooking the canal, and finally turning sharply to the right between the two trees at the lower end of the building. At the first turning a small tunnel runs beneath the pathway, and this has been shored up and otherwise strengthened for the extraordinary strain it would have to bear from the passage of nearly eleven tons weight. Before, however, the van had progressed so far as this point, six horses pulling with all their might, two of the wheels sunk deeply in the gravel, and there was a considerable delay while levers and jacks were applied to lift the burden clear. The grounds were cleared of ordinary visitors by half-past six o'clock, and for a long while after the whole force of workmen were engaged in getting the van along by easy stages. Between nine and ten o'clock, however, Jumbo on wheels was brought safely to the end of the first stage of his journey as an outward bound emigrant, and the people outside the paling set up a mighty shout on catching sight of the van, looming a huge white shadow in the darkness. The latter portion of this six hours' movement had taxed the best energies of eight of Pickford's chosen draught horses.

The horses were now taken out to enjoy a well-deserved rest, and the men dispersed also for a spell. The scene, which for some hours had been one of excitement, now changed. The gardens became quiet and deserted, save for the half dozen or so of men engaged about the van. The spectators beyond the gates, taking this as a sign that operations were at an end, went their several ways, until but a few remained. Jumbo appeared to feel the loneliness, and maybe the cold, more than anything that had previously befell him, and while two or three men were engaged in nailing to the side of the van the direction, "Barnum, Bailey and Hutchinson, New York, U. S. A."—a luggage label two feet square—he manifested restlessness which speedily grew into agitation. He swayed to and fro, trumpeted, and thrust his trunk, from which the breath streamed like engine steam, vigorously between the bars. Then he tugged hard at the chains, banged his body as well as he was able against the sides, and backed heavily upon the rear of the structure, now covered with tarpaulin. The solid proportions of this van have been often described, but the quarter of an hour before eleven o'clock showed that they were none too solid. The great van creaked and shook, and if the wheels had not been chocked the violence of the struggle inside would have moved it backwards towards the canal. Scott was sent for. One of the other keepers brought a bag of chaff, but Jumbo snatched up the bag, and seemed to hurl it over his back. The struggles were renewed with sufficient effect to induce a belief that if he continued them long enough the van would be in danger. What spectators had collected near drew to a distance, and prudently looked about for a means of retreat. The elephant, however, appeared to tire of his fruitless contention with his chains, and Scott coming up, the docile creature calmed in a moment at the sound of his voice. After twenty minutes had passed quietly the rattling of chains was again heard, and Jumbo made another alarming effort to be free. The strong wooden frame, banded with iron, stood the shock, however, though the enormous strength of the prisoner caused no little alarm. Those of the bystanders who remembered how an Indian elephant once, on transit to the docks, broke his chains before the vehicle he occupied was a mile from the park, prophesied that Jumbo would probably make himself heard before he had arrived at the water-side. To prevent mishap for the present, at any rate, temporary shores were fixed on either side of the van, and these undoubtedly steadied the top-heavy-looking machine.

The route to St. Katherine's docks was a total distance of more than four miles. A body of the S division of police was posted in the gardens and park, and along the route, and Mr. Superintendent Tallet, of the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and his men, were watching the proceedings. There was no call, however, for police interference. The crowd in the road, which gathered again toward midnight, amused themselves by singing "Rule, Brittannia," and shouting to Jumbo to take of himself, but good humor prevailed. At one o'clock in the morning a team of ten horses was attached to the van, and after a few fruitless efforts a start was made. The van ran briskly to the gateway, but it crashed into one of the posts and held fast, half in the road and half in the gardens. There for some time it remained, but it was eventually extricated, and Jumbo moved on his journey, arriving in New York early Friday morning.

A FELLOW-FEELING

The President and Teller's Son Sam.

Special to the Chicago Times.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Senator Teller, of Colorado, is the happy father of two boys One of them named Sam, a red headed young dare-devil of eight years, was recently introduced to President Arthur. He took the introduction coolly, and proceeded at once to establish familiar relations with the chief magistrate. Two days ago Sam, who is fond of piscatorial pursuits and will brave everything in the way of parental punishment to satisfy his taste, sat fishing at the foot of Seventeenth street. After the style of older anglers, he had his line between his right first finger and thumb, and was anxiously, yet patiently, awaiting a bite. He was aroused from his reverie by a large, tall man smoking a cigar, who cheerily accosted him: "Hallo, Sam, what are you doing there, my boy?"

"Why, hallo, Mr Arthur," was the boy's response, "I am fishing. Don't you want to take a line yourself?"

"No, not now," said the president, smiling. "Don't you like to fish?" asked the young westerner.

"Oh, yes," was the reply. "I frequently go fishing. I caught a fifty-pound salmon in the St. Lawrence once."

"Do you like to come here, Mr. Arthur?"

"Yes, I do, Sam," responded the president, with a touch of sadness in his voice "I am a widower, and my wife used to live in that house"—pointing to a humble looking frame building

I think it is funny for you to be here, continued Sam, hauling up his line and looking disgusted when he found his bait gone and no fish on the hook, "Ain't you afraid of getting shot, like Mr Garfield?"

"No, Sam, replied the president. "I never think of that. I like to stroll around, and especially to come down here."

"If I was a rich man like you, Mr. Arthur," said the boy, "and had all the carriages and horses you have, I would not come walking around here; I would ride out to Great Falls and fish."

General Arthur laughed at the artlessness of the boy, and said he was going to Great Falls some of these days to fish

"Are you going to the circus, Mr. Arthur?" broke in Sam, abruptly.

"No. Are you?"

"Yes, indeed, I wouldn't miss the circus for anything Governor Pacheco is going to take me in his carriage It's two miles, you know, and we've got to ride. They say they've got an awful big elephant. You ought to go and see it, Mr. Arthur."

"I would like to do so," said the president, "but I can't go this afternoon, Sam I guess you had better come and take dinner with me. Pull up your line and let us go."

"No, indeed," was the quick reply, "can't get me to dinner to-day. I'm going to the circus. I'd rather go to a circus any time than dinner."

"Well," said the president, laughing, "let us walk up the street railway. It's near time for the circus."

"That's so," said Sam, pulling up his line and stuffing the mayor part in his pocket. "I'll go along with you, Mr Arthur."

They walked up the street a short distance, Sam holding on by the president's hand. "Why," he broke out suddenly, "we all like you, Mr. Arthur, because of your appointment of Mr. Teller. Herbert likes you, too."

"Who is Herbert?" asked the president.

"He's my big brother. He's twelve years old and he likes you. I'll bring him up to see you."

"All right," was the genial reponse "Both of you come up to the White house and have dinner with me some day, and I'll drive you out to Great Falls, where we will have some good fishing."

"That'll be bully," cried Sam. His eyes brightened as he saw a carriage driving toward them. He yelled to the coachman to stop. "There's Governor Pacheco," he shouted. The governor stepped out of the carriage and advanced toward the president, and Sam sang out; "Hello, governor' Mr. Arthur, this is my friend, Governor Pacheco, I want you to know him. I'll go with you now, governor Good day, Mr. Arthur," relinquishing his hold of the president's hand, and General Arthur and Governor Pacheco separated. The boy shouted: "Oh, Mr Arthur, you must go to the circus when Jumbo comes. They say he is the biggest elephant in the world. You had better drive down and take me with you when he comes."

The president laughingly assented to the proposition. It was very evident that Sam thought more of Governor Pacheco than he did of the president, and more of the circus than he did of both.
